Future of Scotland For the 21st century, future of Scotland seems to appear much brighter than the past few decades. In the 1990s, the discovering of oil and gas in the north see brought a new prosperity to the north of Scotland. Aberdeen has become an important harbour and industrial spot. With money coming from the oil, Scotland has modernized itself and is now a dynamic part of the European Union. In 1999, the Scottish Parliament re-opened (it was closed from 1707). This gives more power to the Scottish to assume their future. Scotland also promotes tourism, which is a source for future economical development.
